Golf courses' quick win media mix for social media

Develop a fan page integrated into your website <http://www.facebook.com/SocialMediaGolf>

Have a dedicated landing page with some clever work using FBML or iFrame.

Chat with your members using social media newsletters – these are really Cool Newsletters.

Share the newsletter over your social and digital online channels as well as the traditional 'sending it out by e-mail and snail mail' and leaving them around the shop.

Post frequently & always, always reply to fans' questions.

Have an info page for your golf course – sharing information like, scorecard, course ratings, directions etc.

Have a rates page – what are your regular tee-time rates, weekend rates etc.

Surveys – This is an excellent opportunity to ask the fans what kind of deals they are interested in.

Foursquare offers a similar service with similar functionality. The major difference between Foursquare and Facebook places is that Foursquare is built to be more of a social game versus a social tool like Facebook.

Many Foursquare users will have linked up their accounts to “tweet” their location. Watch your competition on Twitter and search for people who check-in at competitor’s golf courses. Send them a tweet and mention your exclusive offering to Foursquare users.
